More Light, Less Fuss

If you want more light on the front of your XJ or MJ, but don't want the hassle or weight of aftermarket bumpers, the Front Light Bar from Zone Worx might be the answer for you. Featuring a 1-inch OD tube that bolts onto the stock steel front bumper and holds three or four 9-inch lights (depending on model), this light bar is under $100 and fits the front of the first unibody Jeeps like it was meant to be there. Information: Zone Worx; 623/512-3600, www.zoneworx.net

...vant. The company also offers new out-uts, gears, and parts so you can build a complete new Dana 300 all at once or just gut a junkyard version and upgrade as money allows. Information: STaK 4x4;

...keep stable in off-camber situations but is light enough to allow good articulation.
The heavy-duty one is comparable to your stock sway bar to help retain the body-roll characteristics you had from the factory.

Shock-Saving Bumps

While they might not work for desert racing, these bumpstops will solve all your problems for just about anything else. No more bottoming out of the shocks, no more fabricating bumpstop extensions, and no more buying extended bumpstops that just aren't long enough. These can be installed on any stock or aftermarket shock with the Daystar installation tool. Information: Daystar Products International; 800/595-7659, www.daystarweb.com
